The Sons of Sunny Italy.
Nearly all the rag and bone pickers in New York are Italians, men, women, boys and girls. A reporter thus refers to the matter: "I had the temerity to go into a living room of a company of Italians. It was half full of paper and rags, and dirty in the extreme. A clothing dealer who does a business in a building the upper floors of which are occupied by Italians, described their mode of living. Sometimes as many as twenty live in a single room, from which a rental of from three dollars to six dollars a week is paid. They use no furniture and sleep in the rags. The sexes are indiscriminately mixed, and cleanliness is disregarded entirely. The people are peaceful, but a great deal worse in their habits than the Chinese."

As the reporter went up the street he saw an Italian bending over a barrel in front of a restaurant and stopped to watch him. The man drew out with his hook a number of steaming bones and several pieces of meat, which he carefully wrapped in a sheet of paper, doubtless with the intention of taking them home and eating them.

"How will these people live in the winter?" the keeper of a market was asked.

"I don't know how they live now," was the response. "I suppose they make a living in the same mysterious way in the winter."

Chinese would live on what a German would starve. The Italian, in turn, will live on what the man from China would starve. In New York the average Italian can live on two cents a day. He gets his roast beef out of the ash barrels, and keeps himself in Havana cigars by picking up stumps in front of theatres, hotel and restaurants.
